AUTO BANK ROBBER FOILED

Dairing Attempt to Rob Area Bank Fails and Robber Gets Away

FAILS TO BLOW OPEN SAFE

The Auto Was Out of Gasoline After he Had Left the Bank and he w:s Forced to M.ke His E cape on Foot

A lone automobilist made an unsuccessful attempt to rob the Citizens bank at Area about one o'clock Wednesday morning, but after breaking into the bank and setting off an explosive in the endeavor to force open the safe containing the money, he evidently became frightened at the noise and left the building without further effort to get into the big steel depository. And making his way to a limousine auto which, he had secreted behind the slaughter yards, he found that the car balked and would not carry him away from the scene of action—therefore he had to "beat it" on foot, but even in that manner he made his escape and is still at large.

The unfortunate part of the affair is the failure of a man named Pufall, a car inspector of the Soo Line railroad, to make an effort to apprehend the man or at least sound an alarm after he had heard an explosion and had seen a man dashing away from the bank building. The fact that he was willing to let the matter drop and return quietly to his dining for the lunch he was eating is what enabled the would-be robber to make his escape.

The auto is an Allen, seven-passenger Model 40, made at Fostario, Ohio. It bears the number P6,444, Ill. The car is owned by Harry Oakes, a taxicab operator out of the union station,

It was about 1 o'clock that Pufall, returned to his home from Leighton, where he inspects cars, went into the house for his lunch as is his custom. He had just seated himself at the table when he heard an explosion. Rushing to the front door, he saw a man running fast away from the bank just opposite his home. Pufall returned to the house and resumed his lunch.

When Irving Payne cashier of the bank went to open the door, he found it already unlocked. He did not take long to find that an attempted bank robbery had been tried. Here is what a search showed:

That somebody had stepped into the lobby of the bank, had used a glass-cutter with which to cut a piece of the plate glass near the door knob; that they had then reached inside and turned the knob which gave them entrance to the bank.

The fellow or fellows then went inside, knocked off the knob on the big safe and inserted a charge of some explosive, probably dynamite. They then stepped off into one corner of the bank and set off explosives by using electric batteries. The discovery of wires showed how they had tried to break the door open. The batteries were not found hence the belief is that the autoists took them from his car and later carried them away when he ran from the bank.

This bank is the same one which was robbed a couple of years ago at which time the robbers were more successful, getting a good sum of money for their effort.

Our Shadow.

Everyone of us casts a shadow. There hangs above us a sort of penumbra—a strange, indefinable something—which we call the personal influence, which has its effect on every other life on which it falls. It goes with us wherever we go. It is not something we can have when we will, as we lay aside a garment. It is something that always pours out from our life like light from a lamp, like heat from a flame, like perfume from a flower.—J. R. Miller.

The Perfect Standard.

It is a mistake to set up our own standard of right and wrong, and expect everybody to conform to it. The Bible standard is the only perfect one, and we must allow others the same right of interpreting it as we claim for ourselves.—Selected.

FIRST HUNTER ARRESTED ON FARM UNDER NEW RULE

A Novak, Waukegan young man was placed under arrest Monday afternoon by Deputy Sheriff Clinton Green when he was caught hunting on the Rasmussen farm near Spauldings Corners. His arrest was the first to occur in Lake county under the new rule of the supervisors which prohibits all hunting on farms in the districts infected with foot and mouth disease. The fear is felt that the hunters may carry the disease from one farm to another. Complaint was made to the sheriff's office and the deputy hastened to the scene and placed Novak under arrest.

Novak at first was inclined to resist arrest but his gun was wrested from him and he was taken to Waukegan. He was given a severe lecture and was informed that if he ever is detected in another violation he will be punished severely. He was then dismissed. The authorities intend to keep a sharp watch and announce that arrest and prosecution will be the lot of hunters persist in violating the new rule that was laid down as a precautionary move in seeking to eliminate the disease.

Physicians are nearly unanimous that the foot and mouth disease cannot be communicated to human beings through the eating of meat even though it may come from infected cattle, but that the real danger lies in drinking unboiled milk or in eating butter made from the milk of a cow that was infected with the disease.

Dr. C. H. Jackson Dead

The Rev. Henry G. Jackson, D. D., a former district superintendent of the Methodist Episcopal church di at his residence in River Forest Tuesday.

Dr. Jackson was twelve years district superintendent, six years in each of two Chicago districts. He was born Jan. 1, 1838, in Manchester, Ind., and would have been 77 years of age at the close of this year.

He came to Chicago in 1885 and became pastor of the Centenary Methodist Episcopal church, West Monroe and South Morgan streets, at a time when Centenary church was one of the leading churches of the city.

In 1868 he was appointed superintendent of his church in South America, with headquarters in Buenos Aires, where he remained ten years. He erected the first methodist church in South America.

He was the author of a Spanish hymn book which is still the standard work among the Spanish speaking people in evangelical churches.

Funeral service will be held in the River Forest Methodist church Thursday at 2 o'clock. Burial at Rosehill. His widow, five sons and two daughters survive him.

TREE AGRICULTURE NOT NEW

Immense Possibilities When the Subject Has Been Thoroughly and Scientifically Sifted.

The modern conception of "tree agriculture" is new—it is only a few years since men began to discuss the possibility of substituting permanent trees for annual seed-bearing grains as the world's food supply. But the fact of tree agriculture is very old, and few who live in northern lands have any idea how far it has progressed in the hot regions.

There are some 60,000,000 cocoanut trees in the island of Ceylon, valued at nearly $200,000,000. They furnish much of the food supply of the inhabitants. The date palms of the Pacific are other examples of tropical fruit trees; and the chestnuts, carobs and olives of southern Europe show something of what can be done in cooler climates.

In the grasp of modern science, trees are as pliant as animals. When we consider what has been accomplished in animal breeding in the last two centuries, we get some idea of tree farming as our descendants may practice it 200 years hence.

It Isn't Your Town—It's You

If you want to live in the kind of a town
Like the kind of a town you like,
You needn't slip your clothes in a grip
And start on a long, long hike.
You'll only find what you left behind,
For there's nothing that's really new.
It's a knock at yourself when you knock your town.
It isn't your town—it's you.
Real towns are not made by men afraid
Lest somebody else gets ahead
When everyone works and nobody shirks
You can raise a town from the dead.
And if while you make your personal stake
Your neighbor can make one, too,
Your town will be what you want to see.
It isn't your town—it's you.

STATE TO KILL 42 COWS

Veterniary Announces State Will Kill Intected Cattle on McCullough Place

FIND NO OTHFR CASES YET

Investigation of Farms That are in Quarantine at Gurnee Shows That Herds are all Right

One of the state veterinaries came from Chicago to Gurnee Sunday, and after going over the various farms which have been exposed to the foot-mouth disease, returned to Chicago with this announcement being made before he left:

"Some day this week, probably Tuesday or Wednesday, I shall send a man from Chicago. He will arrange at once to kill 42 head of cattle on the McCullough brothers farm at Gurnee."

The state man said it would be necessary before the animals are shot, to provide a long trench in which they will be dumped as they are shot and then lime will be thrown on their carcasses as is being done in the Chicago stock yards.

There are no other cases of the disease among the cattle in Warren township, according to the state officer. He went over every one of the farms which have been quarantined and after inspecting the herds made the announcement that the disease was confined to the McCullough brothers stock which had been shipped recently from Wisconsin.

Indicating how the disease 'does not' after all, travel so fast as many believe it is interesting to know that 36 cattle in a field adjacent to the McCulloughs' and owned by Charles Brown of Gurnee, are not at all sick.

"We have examined them and they are perfectly sound even though they have been running right next to McCulloughs" said Mr. Brown.

It was also learned that the other farms in quarantine in Warren township including the Lossmans, Haar and Barnstable have no cases of the disease. It was to those farmers that the McCulloughs sold cattle from the infected herd, the sales and deliveries being made before it was known tha disease had entered their midst. Immediately after it was discovered, the farmers hurried the cows back to McCullough's and they are now there, so, no infected cattle are on the farms mentioned, all being restricted to the McCullough farm. This latter statement will be heard with satisfaction in the county because it shows the disease has not spread from the original place where it was discovered.

Stanton-Stickels Medding

Tuesday afternoon at one o'clock at the Rectory in this village occurred the marriage of Miss Maude Stanton and Ben Stickles both of Ingleside. Miss Blanche Stickles, sister of the groom and John Stanton brother of the bride acted as sponcers.

The bride is a popular young lady of Ingleside and the groom, although now a resident of that village was once a resident of Antioch and has many friends here who join in wishing them a long and happy wedded life.

Mr. and Mrs. Stickles will make their home at Ingleside.

DR. FOLEY ADVISES BOILING MILK

Friends of Rev. Ganster Living at Park Ridge Contract F. and M. Disease

BOILING REMOVES DANGER

Many are Taking Precantion---It is Felt That Everyone Shouls Do Same and Be Safe

The above advice was given out Monday by City Physician Foley who said people cannot be too careful in view of the presence of foot and mouth disease in the community.

He said he thought that milk should be heated to at least from 140 to 160 degrees, the pasteurizing temperature and it would be better yet if it were to be boiled a few minutes to kill all germs. With regard to meat he said all of this should be cooked thoroughly to prevent possible infection.

There seems to be a growing desire on the part of Waukegan people to take every precaution to save themselves from contracting foot and mouth disease which experts declare can be transmitted from an animal to a human being. That human beings can contract the disease has been learned conclusively by at least one Waukegan man.

Rev. Ganster, rector of Christ church has just learned that friends of his living at Park Ridge have conrracted the disease. One of the children was the first to become ill. She had a high fever and fever sores appeared in and about her mouth. Soon the other three children contracted it. Then the parents also became ill of the disease. A physician was called and he diagnosed the illness as foot and mouth disease which he thought had been contracted from drinking milk from infected cows. The condition of all members of this family are serious and Rev. Ganster is much concerned.

That the disease is liable to break out in Waukegan unless more people take the precaution of boiling their milk, is the general opinion. Waukegan's milk supply comes from a district where the disease has made its appearauce. The dairymen probably would not take milk from infected cows if they knew it, but right there is the danger. They are liable to grow careless and infected milk will be the result. Children, it is said, are the most susceptible to the disease, but adults can also contract it.

With regard to eating meat which may have been infected, it is probable that boiling or frying it thoroughly will remove the danger of contagion. However, there are many people who claim they will forego the eating of meat until danger of the contagion is over.

Married at St. Peter's Church

A very quiet wedding was solemnized at St. Peter's church at eight o'clock this (Thursday) morning when Lawence Fagen who resides east of town and Miss Elizabeth Daley of Chicago were joined in wedlock by Rev. Father Lynch.

The bridal couple were attended by John Horan and Miss Fagen, sister of the groom. Mr. and Mrs. Fagen will make their home on the Fagen farm.

The News joins with their many friends in extending congratulations.

Birds in Panama Canal Zone.

The bird resources of the canal zone evidently are of much importance. Possibly if they are properly conserved they will become one of the valuable assets of the United States. Having permitted so much reckless bird slaughter in this country that insect pests are increasing at an alarming rate it would be well to take care of the birds that have been added to our national possessions by reason of the acquisition of a section of Panama.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Cause of the Trouble.

"Didn't marry her, eh? I suppose you were afraid you could not support her in the style to which she had become accustomed?" "Oh, no. I was not at all afraid of that." "Then why didn't—" "It was she that was afraid I could not."—Houston Post.

DEATH OF MRS. W. V. JACKSON AT INGLESIDE

Mrs. Wm. V. Jackson died at her home in Ingleside, Friday, November 6th, at 5 o'clock. Her death was not unexpected as she had been suffering from a complication of diseases for about six months, and for at least two months she had been close to death several times, but, her life no doubt was prolonged by the constant attention of her husband, and her mother Mrs. Elizabeth Cauly.

Mrs. Jachson was beloved by all who had the plasure of her acquaintance. She was a notable women in every respect, hospitable, charitable, kind, and and always ready to give a helping hand in time of need, a lower of home a true friend, and a devoted wife.

Miss Jessie Belle Cauly was born in Racine, Wis., January 15, 1879. She came to Chicago with her parents April 1, 1881. She married Wm. V. Jachson November. 28, 1906, from that time she has lived with her husband at Ingleside up until her death. Besides her husband she leaves her mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Cauley, two sisters, Mrs. Frank Healy, Mrs. Ed. Cahill, one bother, Mr. Arthur Cauley. The funeral was held at St. Mary's church Sunday morning, with Rev J. E. Lynch in charge. Burial at Spring Grove.

Card of Thanks

I wish to thank the kind friends who assisted me during the sickness and death of my wife Mrs. Wm. V. Jackson.

Mr. Wm. V. Johnson,

Elephants Cured of Toothache Give Every Demonstration of Thankfulness to the Dentist.

It is not easy to tell when an elephant has got the toothache, but it is best to keep out of his way when you do know it. A London surgeon, who had been for many years in India, says he would sooner risk a railway accident than meet an elephant with toothache.

It appears that toothache affects an elephant in a more severe manner than it does any other animal. Elephants have very sensitive nerves, and a touch of toothache often brings on madness.

Providing you are able to chain down an elephant and draw out the offending tooth, the brute is certain to be affectionate to you afterward. Here is an instance.

An elephant in Bengal, India, became affected with toothache, but the keepers managed to secure it while a dentist drew a decayed tooth—the cause of the trouble. After a time the elephant seemed to understand that the dentist was trying to do something for his pain, and he gave every evidence of appreciating the attention. When the operation was over he frisked round the dentist like a young lamb.

Pony's Remarkable Jump.

A remarkable feat was performed recently by a polo pony belonging to an officer at Aldershot, England, when it cleared an eight-foot hedge beside a railway embankment. The animal took fright in the village of Weybourne while being ridden by a lad, who was thrown but uninjured.

New Use for Electric Fan.

Because frosts do the most damage when the air is calm, a Paris scientist has advanced the theory that orchards and vineyards can be protected by electric fans to keep the atmosphere moving.

News to Advance Price

On account of the advance in price of paper, ink, etc., and in fact, everything that goes to make up a newspaper, we will, on and after January first, 1915, be obliged to raise the price of The News to $1.50 per year, an advance of fifty cents per year over the old rate. At the some time that we advance the price, we will also double our efforts in getting out a first class, newsy paper, and will, we fell sure succeed in giving the money's worth of reading matter, as well as satisfaction to each and every one of our subscribers.

Before the new rate become effective we make the following offer: To any new subscriber who enters their name on our list prier to January first next, we will for one year accept the present rate, $1.00. Or any of our old subscribers who pay up all arrearages and one year in advance, before the first of January, 1915, will also come under the old rate. Any one paying after the first of the year will be charged the new rate of $1.50.

Thief Was Too Fat.

An amusing feature of a theft case, which was recently tried at Aberdeen, was that in his attempt to break into the cellar of the station refreshment rooms, accused stuck in a window. He could neither get in nor out, and it was in this fix that he was caught.

GERMANS SURRENDER FORT OF TSING TAO

Allies Win Position After Siege Lasting Nearly Three Months.

IMPORTANT IN THAT IT RELEASES BRITISH AND JAPANESE FLEETS.

Turkey Declares "Holy War"—Russians Report Victories in Poland, East Prussia and Galicia—London Dispatches Optimistic as to the Situation in France and Belgium.

Tokyo, Nov. 8.—It was officially announced here that the German fortress of Tsing Tao has surrendered to the Japanese and British forces.

The announcement states that the first step in bringing about the surrender of the fortress occurred at midnight, when the infantry charged and occupied the middle fort of the line of defense. In this operation they took 200 prisoners.

The greatest advantage which will come to the allies by the fall of Tsing Tao will be the release of the fleets now before that stronghold. They will be freed to take part in naval activity in other seas.

It has been announced that the release of these vessels will be followed by an active campaign to drive the German cruisers which have been raiding shipping in all parts of the world from the high seas. It is not known whether the first action will be against the Germans now off the west coast of South America or the Karlsruhe and other raiders in the Indian ocean.

Japs Lose 1,078 in Battle.

London, Nov. 8.—The allies casualties before Tsing Tao are two British killed and eight wounded, including two majors, and 200 Japanese killed and 878 wounded.

Allies Prepare to Oust Germans.

London, Nov. 9.—The French drive against the German line is reported to have commenced. The army of General Joffre has taken the offensive all along the line from the sea to German Lorraine. With the hope of duplicating the result of the battle of the Marne, General Joffre has given the word for a supreme effort to drive the Germans back to their own territory.

One statement records that between the River Lys and the North sea the fighting generally was less violent, and the attacks of the enemy, sporadic in the main, were repulsed, particularly in the direction of Dixmude and to the northeast of Ypres.

The statement says the activity of the Germans was concentrated in the region about Ypres "without result."

"On almost all this front we in turn took the offensive and advanced, notably in the region to the north of Messines."

The British troops, too, were able to record an appreciable advance in the neighborhood of Armentieres, and other British forces repelled the attacks directed by the kaiser's troops against the positions held by the British between Givenchy and Arras. Action of the artillery was severely hampered by the fog and aviators had great difficulty in observing the enemy's positions and directing the range of the gunners.

A terrific battle is raging on the Aisne, where the allies also have begun to press forward.

After making several marked advances in the vicinity of Soissons a battle of great magnitude and fierce character was precipitated when the French and British attacked the plateau of Vregny, to the northeast of Soissons. The battle lasted all day, but the German defensive was so stubborn that when night fell the allied troops had been unable to gain the height.

"Great Victory" for Allies.

London, Nov. 7.—"The greatest success gained on the side of the allies since the beginning of the war has been the complete victory of the Russian army against the Germans in Poland, East Prussia and Galicia."

This was the word conveyed to General Joffre and Lord Kitchener in telegrams by Grand Duke Nicholas of Russia, commander of the czar's army.

"Following our successes upon the Vistula," said the telegram, "a complete victory has just been gained by our troops along the whole of the front in Galicia. I am most confident of the speedy and entire accomplishment of our common task, persuaded as I am that decisive victory will be gained by the allied armies."

This stirring news was followed by dispatches from Petrograd telling of the recapture by the Russian of the Galician town of Jaroslav with 5,000 Austrian prisoners.

Armies Fail to End Deadlock.

Paris, Nov. 7.—The bloody battle between the Germans and the allies in the region between Dixmude and the River Lys is still undecided, according to an official announcement issued here. Neither of the contestants have been able to break the mighty deadlock.

Lille Is in Flames.

Fired by the shells of the allies' artillery, Lille is burning in several places. Several villages surrounding that city have been burned to the ground. The fighting in that region of northern France continues night and day, but thus far the Germans have balked the efforts of the allies to drive them from Lille.

"Holy War" Is Called.

Berlin, Nov. 7.—The Sheik-ul-Islam, ecclesiastical head of the 220,000,000 Mohammedans in the world, has proclaimed a holy war of Islam against the enemies of Turkey. The significance of this action becomes evident when it is recalled that more than 100,000,000 Mohammedans, or nearly half the total number in the world, are now under English rule. These men, according to a proclamation said to have been issued by the Sheik-ul-Islam, must either fight the enemies of Turkey or be disloyal to the head of their faith. No serious demonstrations of the Mohammedan population are feared in India.

Many Loyal to Britain.

The great majority of the followers of Islam there are said to be loyal to Great Britain. This statement is borne out by the proclamation issued by the Nizam of Hyderabad, who is perhaps the most important Moslem potentate in India, calling upon all Moslems in that country to remain loyal to Great Britain. His proclamation reads:

"It is the bounden duty of the Mohammedans of India to adhere to their old and tried loyalty to the British government, in which power they enjoy the highest personal and religious liberty, such as they would under no Moslem or non-Moslem power."

Already there are reports that the Mohammedans of Afghanistan are marching on the Indian frontier. A message from Constantinople via Berlin says that the ameer of Afghanistan has sent out 170,000 men with 135 guns.

The bombardment of the Dardanelles forts continued without much result. A Turkish report states that one British ship was struck by a shell from a fort, and that an explosion followed on board and the warship went down.

Ready to Cross German Border.

Petrograd, Nov. 9.—The czar's troops have routed the Germans from Wirballen, the last fortified obstacle to the general Russian advance over the border into East Prussia. The way is now clear for the Russian invasion of German territory in the northeastern area.

After a furious bombardment the Cossacks charged the outer works of the strongly fortified position, and in their wake came the masses of infantry, but when the foot troops reached the inner forts the Germans had fled, leaving behind them large quantities of war materials and a number of guns, which in their haste they had neglected to dismantle or destroy.

The Russians swept onward to Stalluponen, about sixteen miles northeast of Gumbinnen, the terminal of the railway line to Koenigsburg, and there they are established, reforming for the new advance movement which will carry them over the border.

May Force Italy Into War.

Rome, Italy, Nov. 8.—Italy is sending garrison troops to Tripoli to defend her settlements and loyal tribesmen against Arab rebels and Bedouins who have raided supply columns in the interior and have attacked an encampment of submissive tribesmen at Derna. Turkey, it seems, has disregarded the promise made to Italy by Germany that the porte would not threaten Italian colonies.

Events are tending more and more to force Italy into the war.

ONE OF THE GREAT AUSTRIAN SIEGE GUNS

The Austrian army, as well as the German, is supplied with enormous siege guns, some of which were used in the siege of Antwerp. One of these heavy howitzers, with a group of Austrian officers, is here shown.

Egypt Refuses Holy War.

London, Nov. 9.—The news from Egypt is reassuring. Religious leaders and their tribal chiefs have rejected Turkey's demand for a holy war and are promising loyalty to the empire. British squadrons are watching every port from which Turkey could transport troops to Egypt.

The Russians are making a vigorous campaign within Turkish Armenia. Petrograd today announced that the fortified position of Kaprikoi, on the Caucasian frontier, guarding the road to Erzeroum, has been captured by the Russians.

Prince of Wales Will Go to the Front.

London, Nov. 5.—The prince of Wales who, since he joined the army at the beginning of the war, has been importuning his father and Lord Kitchener for permission to go to the front, probably will have his wish granted soon. The prince may join Sir John French's staff on the continent, which means he will be kept a safe distance behind the firing line, instead of serving with his regiment, the Grenadier guards.

German War Minister Ill.

Berlin, Nov. 7.—War Minister von Warklowski is suffering from heart disease. He has left the war zone for Bad Nauheim. General von Deimling of the light infantry lines has been wounded by a splinter from a shell. He remains with his army corps.

TO ATTACK CRACOW

Austrian Stronghold Is Menaced by Czar's Army—Retreat Is Cut Off.

RUSS MARCH ON BRESLAU

Constantinople Is Being Shelled by Russian and Allied British and French Fleets—Germans Report Gains in France.

Petrograd, Nov. 11.—Cracow, the key to Vienna, will be attacked within twenty-four hours, according to unofficial advices from the Russian front. The czar's troops are at the city's gates. The Austrian rear guard has been driven from Pinczow, commanding an important crossing of the upper Vistula, 25 miles from Cracow, and the Russians have crossed the river and cut off the retreat of the Austrians on that fortress.

A little to the north the Russians are advancing with a seemingly irresistible force on Breslau on the way to Berlin. Berlin admits that the Russ advance at this point is well beyond the Warthe river between Czenstochowa, 12 miles east of the border and Kalisz.

Northwest of Kalisz the Russian invasion of Posen at Pleschen, 15 miles inside the frontier, apparently threatens the German line of communication.

Russ Oust All Germans.

Official announcement in Petrograd was made that the German forces which invaded northwestern Poland had been driven back into East Prussia. This clears Russian territory of the invader except the extreme western part of Russian Poland, where the German are still striving to hold their positions against the repeated attacks of the czar's army.

Additional successes against the Ottoman forces in Turkish Armenia were also officially reported.

Constantinople Is Shelled.

Constantinople is being attacked from two sides. The Russian Black sea fleet is bombarding the Turkish forts at the entrance to the Bosporus and the allied French and British squadrons are shelling the fortifications at the mouth of the Dardanelles, the southern entrance to the Sea of Marmora.

Two ports on the north coast of Asia Minor have been shelled by two Russian warships, the Kagul and the Pamiat Merkooria. After the attack of these two towns—Kohlu and Suglu—the ships sailed west and began the attack on the Bosporus.

The Turkish naval coaling station at Eregli, 130 miles northeast of Constantinople, has been shelled by the Russians. A number of vessels in the harbor were sunk.

The former German cruiser Breslau meanwhile bombarded the Russian port of Poti.

While these activities were attracting the attention of the Turks on their northern coast, the French and British ships in the Aegean bombarded the Dardanelles base. It is expected that as soon as the destruction of these positions is complete marines will be landed on the Trojan plain to advance on Constantinople from the land side.

With the approach of the allies a revolt is said to have broken out in the Turkish capital.

Allies Repulse New Attacks.

Official announcement was made in Rome that the Germans have taken a new offensive against Dixmude and in the region of Ypres, but that their attacks have everywhere been repulsed by the allies. New attacks by the Germans in Alsace have also been repulsed.

In the Aisne and in the Argonne district there are alternate demonstrations on both sides. Along the heights of the Meuse the Germans have lost some ground, it is reported by the war office.

The allies have cut off the German garrison in Ypres from the main body operating toward it from the east and they have forced back this main body, whose only hope was to maintain a violent offensive.

Berlin Claims Gains Near Ypres.

Berlin, Nov. 11.—The following statement was given out here:

Several of the enemy's ships again attacked our right wing yesterday, but were quickly driven off by our artillery.

The enemy attempted an advance from Nieuport during the evening and repeated the attack again at night, but failed completely.

Notwithstanding the most stubborn resistance, out attacks in the direction of Ypres are proceeding slowly but surely. The enemy's counter-attacks northeast of Ypres have been repulsed and several hundred prisoners taken.

Round Trip.

The attorney of a street railroad company in a Kentucky town was examining a skinny sixteen-year-old negro boy who had sued for injuries ostensibly occurred in a collision on the highway, relates the Saturday Evening Post.

"You say," he asked, "that when this street car hit that wagon you were riding on the front seat of the wagon?"

"Dat's whut I said," answered the little negro.

"And you say the force of the blow knocked you up in the air?"

"Yes, suh—'way up in de air."

"Well, how long did you stay up there?" demanded the lawyer.

"Not no longer dan it tuck me to git down!" answered the truthful complainant promptly.

Advise War Study.

Mrs. Philip N. Moore, former president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, is quoted as saying that public opinion should be correct before it crystallizes. She urges that every club program for the winter should be revised to include the study of the war question, its political, economic, ethical, business and psychological sides. She also proposes that the board of the general federation name a committee on foreign relations, which should take the initiative in peace proposals to the women of all countries. Mrs. Moore is the foreign correspondent of the G. F. W. C.

Bound to Have Effect.

The lecture had been long, preachy and unrelieved by humor, but at its close a sad-faced, earnest-looking man strode emphatically to the stage and grasped the speaker by the hand.

"Doctor Neverend," he said, heartily, "I want to assure you your message tonight will have a marked effect on the life of every nervous, fretful, impatient man who heard you."

"Indeed!" cried the delighted lecturer, "You really believe it will affect their whole lives?"

"Undoubtedly," declared the sad-faced man, "it will shorten them."—Judge.

MARCHES WITH THE TROOPS

Pestilence Usually Follows in the Wake of Armed Hosts In Warfare.

Pestilence usually treads close after the rear guard of a great war, says the Boston Transcript. Armies are great disease spreaders and the regions in which they campaign not infrequently show in the increased mortality among their civilian residents immediately after peace that noncombatants are by no means exempt from the penalty of the presence of great contending hosts. Occasionally we read in the dispatches of the appearance of cholera in the eastern theater of war. It is said to have manifested itself in the Austrian camps and if the report is true close contact with the Russian army may account for this new affliction on a country already terribly disturbed. Cholera lurks in the East and not a few of the Russian troops have been drawn from its abiding place. A Russian army, according to tradition, introduced cholera into Europe in 1830-31. It had returned from a triumphant campaign in Turkey to suppress the Polish insurrection. One of the earliest and most illustrious victims of cholera was Marshal Diebitsch, the Russian general in chief, whose death focused the attention of the world on this new plague. After crossing Germany cholera then entered Great Britain and was brought to North America by Irish immigrants. International quarantine may be the first duty.

ALL ANIMALS SLAIN

FOOT-AND-MOUTH DISEASE NOW SAID TO BE UNDER CONTROL AT CHICAGO.

SHOW CATTLE ARE ISOLATED

Value of Stock Slaughtered Is Put at $74,000—Federal and State Governments to Stand Cost—Epidemic Is Checked.

Chicago, Nov. 10.—With the exception of about seventy-five cases among the 800 prize dairy show cattle isolated in the feeding stables near the International Amphitheater, there is not a case of hoof-and-mouth disease left at the Chicago stockyards.

The last cases were eradicated when 262 cattle and 160 hogs were shot and their carcasses thrown into the quicklime pits. For the first time since the stockyards opened, there was not a living steer, hog or sheep inside the yards.

Dr. S. E. Bennett, government inspector in charge, declared the epidemic was absolutely under control in Chicago. His men, working with the state veterinarian, will go out into the state to begin the slaughter of infected dairy herds.

The first work will be done in the south end of Kane county, where about 500 animals on seven farms will be shot and their carcasses destroyed.

The value of the animals slaughtered and buried in quicklime since the epidemic was found at the stockyards is $74,000, $52,000 for the cattle and $22,000 for the hogs. The federal government will pay half of this sum, and Governor Dunne of Illinois has promised to ask the legislature to appropriate sufficient money to pay the other half.

Doctor Bennett said the disease was completely checked here, and that it soon would be under control in all the states except Montana. It is feared that if it spreads to the ranges, it may not be stamped out for years. He had received no word from there yesterday, but said government inspectors were carefully guarding the trainload of animals in which the infection was discovered and watching for any new outbreak along the line.

No new states have been quarantined, but fresh outbreaks were reported down state. About fifty counties in Illinois are under quarantine. Two herds were destroyed in Wisconsin, and the state veterinarian of Colorado issued an order barring all live stock from entering the state unless the cars are fumigated and the animals passed by a state or government inspector. He also asked the authorities of Utah, Wyoming, New Mexico, Arkansas and Oklahoma to adopt similar precautions.

CLERK DESERVED THE ROSE

His Process of Clever Reasoning Was Certainly Well Worth the Decoration.

When a telegram arrived at the Waldorf addressed to Mrs. S. Harkins Edward Glasheen, the information clerk looked through his big book and found no person by the name of Harkins was stopping in the hotel. It is a part of his duties, according to the New York Times, to deliver telegrams that at first look undeliverable, and as he studied the address on the telegram, knowing something about the Morse alphabet, he remembered that "h' is four dots and a "p" is five. Whereupon he looked into his big book again and found that Mrs. S. Parkins was stopping in the hotel.

When Mrs. Perkins came to the desk he handed her the telegram and asked if it was for her. She handed it back. "I am sure it is not for me," she said.

"Would you mind opening and making sure?" asked Glasheen.

Mrs. Parkins tore open the envelope and glanced at the signtaure. "Why, it is for me!" she exclaimed.

Then Glasheen picked up the rose somebody had just presented to John Woelfle, his assistant, and stuck it in his buttonhole.

Forgot Himself.

There is a story going about of a man who resolved to give up drinking, and went to a temperance lecturer to draw him up an affidavit to that effect. The document was drawn, read and proved. The party held up his hand and murmured the usual promise. The paper was then properly sealed and delivered.

"What's to pay?" asked the pledge-maker.

"To pay? to pay?" exclaimed the lecturer. "Nothing, of course—this is a labor of love."

"Nothing to pay!" returned the grateful but very forgetful pledgetaker. "Well, that's handsome. Let's go and have a drink!"

How to Dodge the Snuffles.

"If you want to dodge the 'snuffles,'" says a well-known physician, "the time to begin is right now. Don't cuddle yourself. Don't hug the radiator. Don't wear heavy underwear. Don't stay indoors. Don't eat too much. Don't bundle up. Don't be too comfortable. And girls, go right on wearing your low-necked dresses. It is the most sensible style that woman has adopted in years. Keep to it. But do not make the mistake of changing from low to high and then back again. To get into condition for the winter and the rout of the 'snuffles' you must extend the unprotected area."

United Only for One Thing.

India is not a nation. It is a geographical conglomeration of various peoples and languages, whose early history was a succession of tribal conflicts and warring states, bound together only by a certain oneness of religion, and above all, hued and molded by foreign conquest into an amalgamation of unwilling submission and compulsory allegiance.

Coal and Petroleum Production.

The United States mines nearly 40 per cent of the world's output of coal and produced 65 per cent of the petroleum in 1913. Of the more essential metals, 40 per cent of the world's output of iron ore is raised from American mines, and the smelters of the United States furnish the world with 55 per cent of its copper and at least 30 per cent of its lead and zinc.

A REBELLION
Food Demanded.

The human body will stand a lot of abuse, but sometime it will surely rebel and demand proper food in place of the pasty, starchy, greasy stuffs on which it has been made sick.

Then is the time to try Grape-Nuts, the most scientific and perfect food in the world.

A lady of Washington says: "Three years ago I was very ill with catarrh of the stomach and was given up to die by one doctor. I laid in bed four months and my stomach was so weak that I could not keep down medicine or hardly any kind of food and was so weak and emaciated after four months of this starvation that my daughter could easily lift me from bed and put me in my chair.

"But weak as my stomach was, it accepted, relished and digested Grape-Nuts without any difficulty the first time that wonderful food was tried.

"I am now strong and in better health than for a great many years and am gradually growing still stronger. I rely on Grape-Nuts for much of the nourishment that I get. The results have certainly been wonderful in my case and prove that no stomach is so weak it will not digest Grape-Nuts.

"My baby got fat from feeding on Grape-Nuts. I was afraid I would have to stop giving the food to him, but I guess it is a healthy fat, for his health is just perfect." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

DEFENDS POPULAR REMEDIES

Speakers Says Newspaper Should Investigate Merits of Medicines Before Barring Advertisements.

That an organized attempt has been made to blacken the reputation of the popular family remedies of this country, and to mislead the newspaper publishers into rejecting the advertising of such medicines, was the charge made by Carl J. Balliett, of Buffalo, N. Y., at the convention of the Advertising Affiliation at Detroit.

Mr. Balliett is a director of the Proprietary Association of America, which includes in its membership two hundred firms which make the popular prepared medicines of America.

Mr. Balliett pointed out that it is the duty of the newspaper publisher to refuse the advertising of any fake or fraudulent medicine, just as it is his duty to refuse any fake or fraudulent advertising, but it is not right to shut down on all medical advertising because there have been some fakers, any more than it would be right to refuse to publish all department store advertising because certain stores have made a practice of lying about bargain sales.

Disease and death are mysteries. People who are perfectly well are skeptical. They laugh at the time-worn patent medicine joke, just as they laugh again and again over the many variations of the operation joke—"The operation was a success but the patient died." This so-called humor has perhaps hurt the medicine business with well people, but when the hitherto healthy man feels a severe pain or illness, he immediately wants medicine, and will bless the cure whether it be at the hands of a regular doctor, a homeopath, an osteopath, a Christian Scientist or patent medicine. There is nothing more deadly than disease; nothing more honorable than to cure it.

Mr. Balliett refuted the idea sought to be spread about that patent medicines are unpopular by showing that from 1900 to 1912 the amount of prepared medicines consumed in America increased from $100,000,000 to $160,000,000 annually. He showed that, although the American Medical Association is trying as an organization to exterminate so-called patent medicines, the family doctor, individually, is not fighting them, but prescribing them. He estimated that 40% of the prescriptions written by doctors today include proprietary medicines.

The writings of Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, he said, have also aimed to destroy confidence in proprietary medicines; but that Dr. Wiley's ideas are not infallible is shown by cases where his analyses were entirely wrong. Mr. Balliett mentioned a case where, with all the power of the Government, he fought a preparation as being dangerous to health, and was ingloriously walloped.

There has been spread the idea that a clever faker can mix a few useless ingredients and, by smart advertising, sell tons of it and win sudden wealth; whereas, as a matter of fact, the medicine business is notoriously difficult, and, where there has been one success at it, there have been a hundred failures. Any medicine which has no merit cannot live, because persons who are duped into buying it once will not buy it again, and the profit from advertising a medicine can only come from repeat sales to the same, satisfied people. Therefore, any medicine which has been on the market for a number of years, and is still advertised, must have merit behind it to account for its success.

In conclusion Mr. Balliett declared that no newspaper is doing justice to its readers in the matter of medical or other advertising, unless it investigates, not only the wording of the advertisement offered for publication, but the merits of the article advertised. He pointed out that the few newspapers who have been deluded into the policy of barring out medical advertising have adopted this general policy, rather than to form an investigation bureau of this kind which could, in a constructive and useful effort, investigate and decide what is a good product and what is a fraud, in not only the medicine business, but in every other business which advertises its wares to the public.

The audience seemed to agree with Mr. Balliett's ideas on the subject and the chairman decided the question at issue in his favor.

Censored.

The prankish shepherd-boy in the fable ran with simulated terror into the village.

"——(deleted by the censor)!" he shouted.

The next day the same thing happened again.

Also the third day.

On the fourth day the boy came running likewise, but now his terror was altogether real.

"Wolf!" he screamed frantically.

Whereupon the men of the village having no reason to deem themselves deceived, went out and slew the wolf and saved their flocks from destruction.

For Show and for Use.

Commercially, elephants in India come under two classes—the one of pageantry, the other of utility. Every native prince or nobleman of distinction in India keeps elephants to swell his retinue, while, on the other hand, government officials and private persons, such as timber contractors, etc., require them for work.

The Art of Leaving Off.

There is something magical and satisfying in the art of leaving off. Good advice is infinitely more potent when it is brief and earnest than when it dribbles into vague exhortations. Many a man has been worried into vice by well-meant but wearisome admonitions to be virtuous. A single word of true friendly warning or encouragement is more eloquent than volumes of nagging pertinacity, and may be spoken and left to do its work. After all, when we are anxious to help a friend into the right path, there is not much more or better that we can say than what Sir Walter Scott said when he was a-dying, to his son-in-law, Lockhart: "Be a good man, my dear, be a good man." The life must say the rest."—From "Days Off," by Henry Van Dyke.

Economy in Flour.

The scarcity of flour drove the British privy council to some remarkable sumptuary recommendations in 1795. All families were begged to give up puddings and pies, and the privy councilors announced that they proposed to set an example by confining themselves to fish, meat, vegetables and household bread, partly made of rye. One quartern loaf a week was recommended as the maximum allowance per head, and the loaf should be put on the table for each to help himself, so that there might be no waste. Rich people were urged to do without soups and gravies, to take only the prime cuts and leave the rest for the poor. The poor should be taught how to make soup and rice pudding, rice being a new food which until then had been little used.

NOT APPRECIATED

By JULIA COHEN.

"No," said the young man with the down on his upper lip as he frowned tremulously, "I haven't fully decided as yet just what I shall make of myself."

The young woman, who had on two fraternity pins and had only recently stopped wearing her hair in a braid, clasped her hands. "I should think it would take a perfectly awful amount of thought!" she breathed. "It would be so dreadful to make a mistake, wouldn't it?"

"Can't afford to do that," said the young man, with a condescending shake of his head. "Too much depends on it, you know!"

"Oh, yes," she agreed. "You have to think of the world as well as yourself, too, don't you? Your influence on it and all that! It would be so terrible to waste yourself on something that would not call out your real powers!"

"That's the way I feel about it," confided the young man. "But I'm having the hardest time to convince father of the wisdom of my views. Of course, father's all right, and he's been great to me, but I don't think the fact that he's made some money should give him the right to decide upon my course in life. Any one could make money 30 years ago. Conditions are different now!"

"Oh, yes," agreed the young woman fervently. "Conditions are so different at the present time."

"He doesn't seem to realize that," went on the young man. "He reels off that ancient stuff about six o'clock in the morning and 12 hours a day at the grindstone and $10 suits as the way to success, but I just let him talk and say nothing!"

"You in a $10 suit!" cried the young woman with soft laughter. "Why, Teddy, you're the best dressed one in the crowd—all the girls say so! The idea!"

"Clothes don't mean anything to father," said the young man with a sigh. "He says it's what's inside 'em that counts. Doesn't realize that a man has to make a good impression and all that. Why, I have a frightful time on my allowance, getting decent neckties I'm not ashamed of. Father wants me to go into his office at some ratty $6 a week job and work up, as he calls it. I tried to explain to him that with my education and advantages there was no necessity of my going through that A B C stage, but he's so hidebound you can't do anything with him! As though I were not capable of handling his assistant manager's job! All the fellow does is sit at a desk and shuffle papers and growl 'Humph!' over his eyeglasses at you!"

"I should think you were!" said the young woman, indignantly. "I'll warrant the assistant manager never saw the inside of a college!"

"He didn't," asserted the young man. "He came from the country, as nearly as I can make out. Father is foolishly dependent upon him. I've about decided to strike out for myself!"

"Have you?" cried the young woman. "How perfectly lovely! I know you'll make a tremendous success! What are you going to do?"

"Well," said the young man, "I'm just looking around. I thought of law after going through Griswold's offices. Swell looking place, you know, with two stenographers and oriental rugs and all that. It looks easy. Man came in and talked ten minutes to Griswold's partner and the partner just twirled a pencil and listened, and then snapped: 'You can't do it. Impossible. Sorry. You'll have to pay it!' And I'll bet he sent a bill for $500.

"If I could get through the law course in a year I'd do it, but they string it out so! Of course, commercial life has something to say for itself, too. I'd like to own a big dry goods store. I could manage it from abroad with good men under me, for I shouldn't want to fuss with dry goods details, but there don't seem to be any vacant store, and, anyhow, dad won't stake me to it. He said he'd start me out in the suburbs if I wanted to—fancy me in a two by twice store measuring ribbon myself across the counter!"

"Gracious!" said the young woman. "Aren't people just—queer, though?"

"Then there are always bonds," said the young man. "But everything seems to take up so much time."

"It is just terribly hard," sympathized the young woman. "What problems you men have, don't you?"

"Oh, we must face them, that's all!" said the young man heroically.

"Haven't you any idea at all what you'll decide on?" queried the young woman anxiously. "I should think business men would be just crazy to get you to help them!"

"Well," said the young man reluctantly, "I've about decided, just while I'm looking around, of course, to take the job in father's office. You see, he's shut down on my allowance!"

Leaving Off Too Much.

Mollie—Why, Chollie, you have a cold, haven't you?

Chollie—Oh, yes; I forgot and left off my wrist watch yesterday.

His Preparation.

"Have you had any experience in the movies?"

"Oh, yes, sir; I was for ten years with a furniture van."

TRAGEDY OF A FREEZER

By EMMIE STOCKER.

"It takes a water ice longer to freeze than ice cream, anyhow," encouraged Mrs. Pashley.

Delia, the queen of the kitchen, groaned and stopped turning the handle of the freezer. "Longer, is it?" she inquired acidly. "Well, I've turned this long enough to make water ice for all the people in the state."

"I'm sure," said Mrs. Pashley with the nervousness of a woman who is having friends in to dinner, "that it's going to freeze all right, Delia! Why, it's just perfectly lovely juice left from the preserved strawberries. And so rich!"

"I tell you," persisted Delia; "it ain't a-going to freeze! It's too rich, that's what's the trouble!"

"Nonsense!" said Mrs. Pashley. "I'll set the table for you," she ended placatingly.

"Thank you," said Delia mournfully. "If I ever freeze this I'm afraid I won't have time for that or anything else!"

"Let me turn awhile," said Mrs. Pashley. "You can be doing something else!"

"Is the ice cream done?' asked Jimmy Pashley, appearing in the kitchen door.

"Go away, Jimmy!" ordered his mother. "Of course it isn't done! It takes time to freeze a water ice! If I were using cream, now—"

"It's Going to Freeze All Right."

"Gee!" said Jimmy. "I thought it was ice cream! And I could lick the dasher! Kin I have some—"

"Go away!" repeated his mother. "I think it is getting harder now, Delia!"

"When kin I have some?" persisted Jimmy.

"At dinner time," said his mother.

Delia had opened the freezer. Inside was a soupy mass, ice cold but most evidently with no intention of becoming solid.

"I told you so!" said Delia gloomily.

"Jimmy!" cried his mother. "Go right down to the corner candy store and ask them to send a brick of tutti frutti for seven o'clock!"

"Kin I have some?' asked Jimmy, and then fled before his mother's look.

He returned presently.

"They ain't got any tutti frutti," he announced. "They have ras'bury an' peach an' pineapple an car'mel an'—"

"Have them send anything!" cried his mother, who was peeling tomatoes and making a bad job of it. "And hurry!"

"I told them," Jimmy announced again later, "to put in a lot of things—car'mel an' pineapple ice an' ras'bury an'—"

"Oh!" groaned his mother weakly. "How awful—"

"Whee-e-e!" squealed Delia, who had again looked into the abandoned freezer. "If it ain't freezing all by itself!"

"What!" cried Mrs. Pashley with sudden hope. "I did so count on that strawberry ice for tonight. Begin turning it, then, Delia—and Jimmy, you go tell them we don't want their mixed brick of cream!"

"Oh, ma!" wailed Jimmy.

"Hurry!' cried Mrs. Pashley.

Returning 15 minutes later, Jimmy found himself seized by a hysterical mother. "Jimmy!" she cried. "Go right back and tell them to send the ice cream after all! This miserable stuff melts all up again when we turn the dasher!"

Jimmy rushed off once more. "Let it stand," said Mrs. Pashley. "If it should chance to freeze by itself, Delia, you may have it if you have any company of your own!"

"It's too late to mix a brick!" Jimmy cried, rushing in. "They'll send you plain choc'lut!"

"I hate chocolate!" moaned Mrs. Pashley. "Oh, why did I try a frozen dessert?"

At the salad course Delia whispered in Mrs. Pashley's ear that the ice cream had not yet come. Mrs. Pashley gave an imitation of a hostess with nothing on her mind to worry about. As she removed the plates Delia whispered that it had come. Mrs. Pashley clutched her heart.

The ice cream appeared at last and Mrs. Pashley served it.

"Thank you," said guest number 1, "but I never touch ice cream!"

"I'm so sorry," said guest number two when pressed, "but chocolate disagrees with me!"

"Gee!" gasped Jimmy. "Kin I have three helpings, ma?"—Chicago Daily News.

Nearly every day a rumor floats into town that some farmer or other in the nearby vicinity has discovered hoof and mouth disease among his cattle. But up to the present time none of these can be verified and it is thought that there is very little foundation for the rumors.

His Natural Thought.

A South Dakota railroad is noted for its execrable roadbed. A new brakeman was making his first trip over the road at night and was standing in the center of the car, grimly clutching the seats to keep erect. Suddenly the train struck a smooth place in the track and slid along without sound. Seizing his lantern, the brakeman ran for the door. "Jump for your lives!" he shouted. "She is off the track!"

Morning Light Strongest.

The morning light is from ten to thirty per cent stronger than that of the afternoon, varying with the season. The light-transmitting properties of different kinds of glass vary greatly. Thus the loss of light from glass as compared with outdoor light ranges all the way from thirteen to thirty-six per cent or more. The practice of lapping the panes causes an average loss of light of about eleven per cent. The transmission of light naturally increases as the angle of the roof more nearly coincides with a right angle to the sun's rays.

Gunpowder and Dynamite.

While both gunpowder and dynamite are explosives, they fall into different structural classifications. Gunpowder is a nitrate mixture, whereas dynamite is a nitro compound—that is, the former is a combination of nitrogen solution mixed with other ingredients, and the latter is a compound of nitro-glycerin absorbed by a porous inert solid material.

Cooks Held in High Honor.

There is no better proof of the delicacy of the Greek palate than the honor in which cooks were held. Loss of Water With Age.

The slow but sure loss of water with age has been noted in the tissues of rats and other animals. There is more water in the bodies of young animals than in adults, and the quantity of nitrogen and phosphorus they contain also diminishes with age.

Attacking School System.

Small Boy—"Father, what is an equinox?" Fond Parent—"What in the world do you go to school for? Don't you study mythology? An equinox is a mythical animal, half horse, half ox. They Come High.

"My darling," she murmured, "you were so grand, so noble, when you proposed to me that day in the automobile! Shall I ever forget how touchingly you spoke of your future, of the sacrifices you would make for me? It must have cost you something to speak those words." "It did, Mabel," replied the young man, a shadow creeping over his face. "It cost me about two weeks' salary for the auto hire."

Had the Right Idea.

The tailor's sign in a little inland town was an apple—simply an apple. The people were amazed at it. They came in crowds to the tailor, asking him what on earth the meaning of the sign was. The Hollow Of Her Hand

by George Barr McCutcheon

COPYRIGHT, 1912 BY GEORGE BARR McCUTCHEON: COPYRIGHT, 1912 BY DODD, MEAD & COMPANY

SYNOPSIS.

Challis Wrandall is found murdered in a road house near New York. Mrs. Wrandall is summoned from the city and identifies the body. A young woman who accompanied Wrandall to the inn and subsequently disappeared, is suspected. Mrs. Wrandall starts back for New York in an auto during a blinding snow storm. On the way she meets a young woman in the road who proves to be the woman who killed Wrandall. Feeling that the girl had done her a service in ridding her of the man who though she loved him deeply, had caused her great sorrow, Mrs. Wrandall determines to shield her and takes her to her own home. Mrs. Wrandall hears the story of Hetty Castleton's life, except that portion that relates to Wrandall. This and the story of the tragedy she forbids the girl ever to tell. She offers Hetty a home, friendship and security from peril on account of the tragedy. Sara Wrandall and Hetty return to New York after an absence of a year in Europe. Leslie Wrandall, brother of Challis, becomes greatly interested in Hetty. Sara sees in Leslie's infatuation possibility for revenge on the Wrandalls and reparation for the wrongs she suffered at the hands of Challis Wrandall by marrying his murderess into the family. Leslie, in company with his friend Brandon Booth, an artist, visits Sara at her country place. Leslie confesses to Sara that he is madly in love with Hetty. Sara arranges with Booth to paint a picture of Hetty. Booth has a haunting feeling that he has seen Hetty before. Looking through a portfolio of pictures by an unknown English artist he finds one of Hetty. He speaks to her about it. Hetty declares it must be a picture of Hetty Glynn, an English actress, who resembles her very much. Much to his chagrin Leslie is refused by Hetty. Booth and Hetty confess their love for each other, but the latter declares that she can never marry as there is an insurmountable barrier in the way. Hetty admits to Sara that she loves Booth. Sara declares that Hetty must marry Leslie, who must be made to pay his brother's debt to the girl. Hetty again attempts to tell the real story of the tragedy and Sara threatens to strangle her if she says a word. Sara insults Hetty by revealing that all this time she has believed Hetty to have sinned in her relations with Challis Wrandall. Later she realizes that Hetty is innocent. Leslie again proposes to Hetty and is rejected. Hetty prepares to leave Sara, declaring that after what has happened she can remain no longer. Hetty starts for Europe. At sea she receives a message from Booth that he has started on a faster steamer and will be waiting for her on the other side. Booth meets her and accompanies her to London.

CHAPTER XIV.—Continued.

When the night boat from Dover to Calais slipped away from her moorings that evening, Hetty Castleton and her maid were on board, with all their bags and trunks, and Brandon Booth was supposed to be completely at sea in the heart of that glittering London-town.

The night was fog-laden and dripping, and the crossing promised to be unpleasant. Wrapped in a thick sea-ulster Hetty sat huddled up in the lea of the deckhouse, sick at heart and miserable. She reproached herself for the scurvy trick she was playing on him, reviled herself and yet pitied herself.

A tall man came shambling down the narrow space along the rail and stopped directly in front of her. She started in alarm as he reached out his hand to support himself against the deckhouse. As he leaned forward, he laughed.

"You were thinking of me, Hetty," said the man.

For a long time she stared at him, transfixed, and then, with a low moan, covered her eyes with her hands.

"Is it true—is it a dream?" she sobbed.

He dropped down beside her and gathered her in his strong, eager arms.

"You were thinking of me, weren't you? And reproaching yourself, and hating yourself for running away like this? I thought so. Well, you might just as well try to dodge the smartest detective in the world as to give me the slip now, darling."

"You—you spied on me?" she cried, in muffled tones. She lay very limp in his arms.

"I did," he confessed, without shame. "Gad, when I think of what I might be doing at this moment if I hadn't found you out in time! Think of me back there in London, racing about like a madman, searching for you in every—"

"Please, please!" she implored.

"But luck was with me. You can't get away, Hetty. I shan't let you out of my sight again. I'll camp in front of your door and you'll see me wither and die of sleeplessness, for one or the other of my eyes will always be open."

"Oh, I am so tired, so miserable," she murmured.

"Poor little sweetheart!"

"I wish you would hate me."

"Lie where you are, dearest, and—forget!"

"If I only could—forget!"

"Rest. I will hold you tight and keep you warm. We're in for a nasty crossing, but it is paradise for me. I am mad with the delight of having you here, holding you close to me, feeling you in my arms. The wilder the night the better, for I am wild with the joy of it all. I love you! I love you!" He strained her closer to him in a sort of paroxysm.

She was quiet for a long time. Then she breathed into his ear:

"You will never know how much I was longing for you, just as you are now, Brandon, and in the midst of it all you came. It is like a fairy story, and oh, I shall always believe in fairies."

A long time afterward the throbbing ceased, bell-buoys whistled and clanged about them; the sea suddenly grew calm and lifeless; they slid over it as if it were a quivering sheet of ice; and lights sneaked out of the fog and approached with stealthy swiftness. Bells rang below and above them, sailors sprang up from everywhere and calls were heard below; the rattling of chains and the thumping of heavy luggage took the place of that steady, monotonous beat of the engines. People began to infest the deck, limp and groaning, harassed but voiceless. A mighty sigh seemed to envelop the whole ship—a sigh of relief.

Then it was that these two arose stiffly from their sheltered bench and gave heed to the things that were about them.

The channel was behind them.

CHAPTER XV.

Rattling Old Bones.

They journeyed to Paris by the night mail. He was waiting for her on the platform when she descended from the wagon lit in the Gare du Nord. Sleepy passengers crowded with them into the customs department. She, alone among them all, was smiling brightly, as if the world could be sweet at an hour when, by all odds, it should be sleepiest.

"I was up and on the lookout for you at Amiens," he declared, as they walked off together. "You might have got off there, you know," with a wry grin.

"I shall not run away from you again, Brandon," she said earnestly. "I promise, on my honor."

"By Jove," he cried, "that's a relief!" Then he broke into a happy laugh.

"I shall go to the Ritz," she said, after her effects had been examined and were ready for release.

"I thought so," he announced calmly. "I wired for rooms before I left London."

"Really, this is ridic—"

"Don't frown like that, Hetty," he pleaded.

As they rattled and bounced over the cobble-stones in a taxi-meter on the way to the Place Vendome, he devoted the whole of his conversation to the delicious breakfast they were to have, expatiating glibly on the wonderful berries that would come first in that always-to-be-remembered meal. She was ravenously hungry by the time they reached the hotel, just from listening to his dissertation on chops and rolls and coffee as they are served in Paris, to say nothing of waffles and honey and the marmalade that no Englishman can do without.

Alone in his room, however, he was quite another person. His calm assurance took flight the instant he closed the door and moodily began to prepare for his bath. Resolution was undiminished, but the facts in the case were most desolating. Whatever it was that stood between them, there was no gainsaying its power to influence their lives. It was no trifle that caused her to take this second flight, and the sooner he came to realize the seriousness of opposition the better.

He made up his mind on one point in that half-hour before breakfast; if she asked him again to let her go her way in peace, it was only fair to her and right that he should submit to the inevitable. She loved him, he was sure of it. Then there must be a very good reason for her perplexing attitude toward him. He would make one more attempt to have the truth from her.

She Stared at Him, Transfixed.

Failing in that, he would accept the situation as hopeless, for the time being at least. She should know that he loved her deeply enough for that.

She joined him in the little open-air cafe, and they sat down at a table in a remote corner. There were few people breakfasting. In her tender blue eyes there was a look of sadness that haunted him, even as she smiled and called him beloved.

"Hetty, darling," he said, leaning forward and laying his hand on hers, "can't you tell me what it is?"

She was prepared for the question. In her heart she knew the time had come when she must be fair with him. He observed the pallor that stole into her warm, smooth cheeks as she regarded him fixedly for a long time before replying.

"There is only one person in the world who can tell you, Brandon. It is for her to decide. I mean Sara Wrandall."

He felt a queer, sickening sensation of uneasiness sneak into existence. In the back of his mind, a hateful fear began to shape itself. For a long time he looked into her somber eyes, and as he looked the fear that was hateful took on something of a definite shape.

"Did you know her husband?" he asked, and somehow he knew what the answer would be.

"Yes," she replied, after a moment. She was startled. Her lips remained parted.

He watched her closely. "Has this—this secret anything to do with Challis Wrandall?"

"It has," said she, meeting his gaze steadily.

His hands clutched the edge of the table in a grip that turned the knuckles white.

"Hetty!" he cried, in a hoarse whisper. "You—can't mean that you—"

"You must go to Sara," she cried hurriedly. "Haven't I told you that she is the one—"

"Were you in love with that infernal scoundrel?" he demanded fiercely.

"Sara knows everything. She will tell you—"

"Were you carrying on an affair with him while professing to be the friend of his wife? Tell me that! Did she find you out and—"

"Oh, Brandon, why will you persist?" she cried, her eyes aflame. "I can tell you no more. Why do you glare at me as if I were the meanest thing on earth? Is this love? Is this your idea of greatness? Isn't it enough for you to know that Sara is my loyal, devoted friend; that she—"

"Wait!" he commanded darkly. "Is it possible that she did not discover your secret until the day you left her house so abruptly? Does that explain your sudden departure?"

"I can answer that," she said quietly. "She has known everything from the day I met her. I have not said anything, Brandon, to lead you to believe that I was in love with Challis Wrandall, have I?"

His eyes softened. "No, you haven't. I—I hope you will forget what I said. You see, I knew Wrandall's reputation. He had no sense of honor. He—"

"Well, I have!" she said levelly.

He flushed. "I am a beast! I'll put it in this way, then: Was he in love with you?"

"You are still unfair. I shall not answer."

He was silent for a long time. "And Sara's lips are sealed," he mused, still possessed of doubts and fears.

"Until she elects to tell the story, dearest love, my lips are also sealed. I love you better than anything else in all this world. I could willingly offer up my life for you, but—well, my life does not belong to me. It is Sara's."

"For heaven's sake, Hetty, what is all this?" he cried in desperation.

"I can say no more. It is useless to insist, Brandon. If you can wrest the story from her, all well and good. You will hate me then, dear love. But it cannot be helped. I am prepared."

"Tell me this much: When you refused to marry Leslie, was your course inspired by what had happened in—in connection with Challis Wrandall?"

"You forget that it is you that I love," she responded simply.

"But why should Sara urge you to marry Leslie if there is anything—"

"Hush! There is the waiter. Come to my sitting-room after breakfast. I have something to say to you. We must come to a definite understanding. This cannot go on."

He was with her for an hour in that pinched little sitting-room, and left her there without a vestige of rancour in his soul. She would not give an inch in the stand she had taken, but something immeasurably great in his make-up rose to the occasion and he went forth with the conviction that he had no right to demand more of her than she was ready to give. He was satisfied to abide by her decision. The spell of her was over him more completely than ever before.

Two days later he saw her off at the Gare de Lyons, bound for Interlaken. There was a complete understanding between them. She wanted to be quite alone in the Alpine town; he was not to follow her there. She had reserved rooms at the Schweitzerhof, and the windows of her sitting-room looked straight up the valley to the snow-covered crest of the Jungfrau. She remembered these rooms; as a young girl she had occupied them with her father and mother. By some hook or crook, Booth arranged by wire for her to have them again, not an easy matter at that season of the year. Later she was to go to Lucerne, and then to Venice.

The slightest shred of hope was left for Booth. Even though he might accomplish the task he had set unto himself—the conquest of Sara in respect to the untold story—he still had Hetty's dismal prophecy that after he learned the truth he would come to see why they could not be married. But he would not despair.

"We'll see," was all that he said in response to her forlorn cry that they were parting for ever. There was a grimness in the way he said it that gave her something to cherish during the months to come; the hope that he would come back and take her in spite of herself.

He sailed from Cherbourg on the first steamship calling there. Awake, he thought of her; asleep, he dreamed of Challis Wrandall. There was something uncanny in the persistence with which that ruthless despoiler of peace forced his way into his dreams, to the absolute exclusion of all else. The voyage home was made horrid by these nightly reminders of a man he scarcely knew, yet dreaded. He became more or less obsessed by the idea that an evil spell had descended upon him in the shape of a ghostly influence.

The weeks passed slowly for Hetty. There were no letters from Sara, but an occasional line or so from Mr. Carroll. She had made Brandon Booth promise that he would not write to her, nor was he to expect anything from her. If her intention was to cut herself off entirely from her recent world and its people, as she might have done in another way by pursuing the time-honored and rather cowardly plan of entering a convent, she was soon to discover that success in the undertaking brought a deeper sense of exile than she could have imagined herself able to endure at the outset. She found herself more utterly alone and friendless than at any time in her life. The chance companions she formed at Interlaken—despite a well-meant reserve—served only to increase her feeling of loneliness and despair. The very natural attentions of men, young and old, depressed her, instead of encouraging that essentially feminine thing called vanity. She lived as one without an aim, without a single purpose except to close one day that she might begin the next.

After a time, she went on to Lucerne. Here the life on the surface was gayer, and she was roused from her state of lethargy in spite of herself. Once, from her little balcony in the National, she saw two of her old acquaintances in the chorus at the Gaiety. They were wearing many pearls. Another time, she met them in the street. She was rather quietly dressed. They did not notice her. But the prosperous Hebraic gentlemen who attended them were not so careless.

One day a card was brought to her rooms. For the next two weeks she had a true and unavoidable friend in Lucerne. It would appear that Mrs. Rowe-Martin had not been apprised of the rift in the Wrandall lute. She had no reason to consider the exclusive Miss Castleton as anything but the most desirable of companions. Mrs. Rowe-Martin was not long in finding out (though how she did it, heaven knows), that Lord Murgatroyd's grandniece was no longer the intimate of that impossible person, Sara Gooch. She couldn't think of Sara without thinking of Gooch.

But at last Mrs. Rowe-Martin departed, much to Hetty's secret relief, but not before she had increased the girl's burthens by introducing her into a cold-nosed cosmopolitan set from which there were but three ways of escape. She refused to marry one of them, denied another the privilege of making love to her, and declined to play auction bridge with all of them. They were not long in dropping her, although it must be said there was real regret among the men.

From Mrs. Rowe-Martin and others she heard that Mrs. Redmond Wrandall and Vivian were to be in Scotland in October, for somebody-or-other's christening, and that Leslie had been doing some really wonderful flying at Pau.

"I am so glad, my dear," said Mrs. Rowe-Martin, "that you refused to marry Leslie. He is a cad. Besides, you would have been in a perpetual state of nerves over his flying."

Of Sara, there was no news, as might have been expected. Mrs. Rowe-Martin made it very clear that Sara was a respectable person—but heavens!

The chill days of autumn came and the crowd began to dwindle. Hetty made preparations to join in the exodus. As the days grew short and bleak, she found herself thinking more and more of the happy-hearted, symbolic dicky-bird on a faraway window ledge. His life was neither a travesty nor a tragedy; hers was both of these.

Something told her too that Brandon Booth had wormed the truth out of Sara, and that she would never see him again. It hurt her to think that while Sara believed in her, the man who loved her did not. It is a way men have.

CHAPTER XVI.

Vivian Airs Her Opinions.

Chief among Booth's virtues was his undeviating loyalty to a set purpose. He went back to America with the firm intention to clear up the mystery surrounding Hetty Castleton, no matter how irksome the delay in achieving his aim or how vigorous the methods he would have to employ. Sara Wrandall, to all purposes, held the key; his object in life now was to induce her to turn it in the lock and throw open the door so that he might enter in and become a sharer in the secrets beyond.

A certain amount of optimistic courage attended him in his campaign against what had been described to him as the impossible. He could see no clear reason why she should withhold the secret under the new conditions, when so much in the shape of happiness was at stake. It was in this spirit of confidence that he prepared to confront her on his arrival in New York, and it was the same unbounded faith in the belief that nothing evil could result from a perfectly just and honorable motive that gave him the needed courage.

He stayed over night in New York, and the next morning saw him on his way to Southlook. There was something truly ingenuous in his desire to get to the bottom of the matter without fear or apprehension. At the very worst, he maintained, there could be nothing more reprehensible than a passing infatuation, long since dispelled, or perhaps a mildly sinister episode in which virtue had been triumphant and vice defeated with unpleasant results to at least one person, and that person the husband of Sara Wrandall.

Pat met him at the station and drove him to the little cottage on the upper road.

"Ye didn't stay long," said he reflectively, after he had put the bag up in front. He took up the reins.

"Not very," replied his master.

After a dozen rods or more, Pat tried again.

"Just siventeen days, I make it."

"Seems longer."

"Perhaps you'll be after going back soon."

"Why should you think that, Patrick?"

"Because you don't seem to be takin' much interest in your surroundin's here," said Pat loftily. He delivered a smart smack on the crupper with his stubby whip, and pursed his lips for the companionship to be derived from whistling.

"I suppose you know why I went to Europe," said Booth, laying his hand affectionately on the man's arm.

"Sure I do," said Pat, forgetting to whistle. "And was it bad luck you had, sor?"

"A temporary case of it, I'm afraid."

"Well," said the Irishman, looking up at his employer with the most profound encouragement in his wink, "if it's anny help to you, sor, I'll say that I've never found bad luck to be anything but timporary. And, believe me, I've had plinty of it. Mary was dom near three years makin' up her mind to say yis to me."

"And since then you've had no bad luck?" said Booth, with a smile.

"Plinty of it, begob, but I've had some one besides meself to blame for it. There's a lot in that, Mr. Brandon. Whin a man marries, he simply divides his luck into two parts, good and bad, and if he's like most men he puts the bulk av the bad luck on his wife and kapes to himself all he can av the good for a rainy day. That's what makes him a strong man and able to meet trouble when it comes. The beauty av the arrangement is that bad luck is only timporary and a woman enjoys talking about it, while good luck is wid us nine-tenths of the time, whether we know it or not, and we don't have to talk about it."

This was fine philosophy, but Booth discerned the underlying motive.

"Have you been quarreling?"

"I have not," said Pat wrathfully. "But I won't say as much for Mary. The point av me argument is that I have all the good luck in havin' married her, and she claims to have had all the bad luck in marryin' me. Still, as I said before, 'tis but timporary. The good luck lasts and the bad don't. She'll be after tellin' me so before sundown. That's like all women. You'll find it out for yourself wan o' these days, Mr. Brandon, and ye'll be dom proud ye're a man and can enjoy your good luck when ye get it. The bad luck's always fallin' behind ye, and ye can always look forward to the good luck. So don't be downhearted. She'll take you, or me name's not what it ought to be."

Booth was inclined to accept this unique discourse as a fair-weather sign.

"Take these bags upstairs, Pat," said he on their arrival at the cottage, "and then come down and drive me over to Mrs. Wrandall's."

"Will ye be after stayin' for lunch with her, Mr. Brandon?" inquired Pat, climbing over the wheel.

"I can't answer that question now."

"Hiven help both av us if Mary's good luncheon goes to waste," said Pat ominously. "That's all I have to say. She'll take it out av both av us."

"Tell her I'll be here for lunch," said Booth, with alacrity. From which it may be perceived that master and man were of one mind when it came to considering the importance of Mary.

Pat studied his watch for a moment with a calculating eye.

"It's half-past eliven now, sor," he announced. "D'ye think ye can make it?"

Booth reflected. "I think not," he said. "I'll have luncheon first." Thereupon he leaped from the trap and went in to tell Mary how happy he was to be where he could enjoy home cooking.

At four he was delivered at Sara's door by the astute Patrick, announced by the sedate Watson and interrogated by the intelligent Murray, who seemed surprised to hear that he would not have anything cool to drink. Sara sent word that she would be down in fifteen minutes, but, as a matter of fact, appeared in less than three.

She came directly to the point.

"Well," she said, with her mysterious smile, "she sent you back to me, I see." He was still clasping her hand.

"Have you heard from her?" he asked quickly.

"No. But I knew just what would happen. I told you it would prove to be a wild-goose chase. Where is she?"

He sat down beside her on the cool, white covered couch.

"In Switzerland. I put her on the train the night before I sailed. Yes, she did send me back to you. Now I'm here, I want the whole story, Sara. What is it that stands between us?"

For an hour he pleaded with her, all to no purpose. She steadfastly refused to divulge the secret. Not even his blunt reference to Challis Wrandall's connection with the affair found a vulnerable spot in her armor.

"I shan't give it up, Sara," he said, at the end of his earnest harangue against the palpably unfair stand both she and Hetty were taking. "I mean to harass you, if you please, until I get what I'm after. It is of the most vital importance to me. Quite as much so, I am sure, as it appears to be to you. If Hetty will say the word, I'll take her gladly, just as she is, without knowing what all this is about. But, you see, she won't consent. There must be some way to override her. You both admit there is no legal barrier. You tell me today that there is no insanity in her family, and a lot of other things that I've been able to bring out by questioning, so I am more than ever certain that the obstacle is not so serious as you would have me believe. Therefore, I mean to pester you until you give in, my dear Sara."

"Very well," she said resignedly. "When may I expect a renewal of the conflict?"

"Would tomorrow be convenient?" he asked quaintly.

She returned his smile. "Come to luncheon."

"Have I your permission to start the portrait?"

"Yes. As soon as you like."

He left her without feeling that he had gained an inch along the road to success. That night, in the gloaming of his starlit porch, he smoked many a pipeful and derived therefrom a profound estimate of the value of tact and discretion as opposed to bold and impulsive measures in the handling of a determined woman. He would make haste slowly, as the saying goes. Many an unexpected victory is gained by dilatory tactics, provided the blow is struck at the psychological moment of least resistance.

Forged Antiques.

Arabic enameled glassware is prized as one of the finest productions of the glassmaker's art. Damascus is the principal point for the discovery of Arabic antiques, and undoubtedly much of it was made in that city in ancient times; but United States Consul John D. Whiting at Jerusalem has discovered that the business of manufacturing forgeries of the genuine article has assumed large proportions in Damascus.

NEWSPAR AS LIFE SAVER

Much to ained, in Many Ways, by a Cal Perusal of Current Periodicals.

Some eks ago a number of people in B more died from eating toadstools wh they thought were mushrooms. aring a recent week some half do others have been poisoned in the e way. One of two conclusions t be drawn from these incidents; ther that a great many persons not read the newspapers, or that y are willing to jeopardize their es for a savory dish. All the probabilties are that the explanation of the second occurrence is not reckless, but failure to keep up with curr events. People who read newspapers regularly not only get information about the state of the world in eral and of their own community particular, but they get many valuable pointers as to what to avoid and what not to do. The newspaper as in fact, as a sort of life preserver it is read carefully. That is, for people of average intelligence. There are always some persons who, in spite of conspicuous warnings, will walk on the railroad track and will not look out for the locomotive."—Baltimore Sun.

Concentration.

It has been said that the world needs a few people who can do many things well, but it needs many people who can do one thing well. Concentration brings the best results, and we need not mourn because we cannot do the work our neighbor is doing, if only our own occupation is a useful one and we are putting into it our best thought and skill. Great and small are only relative terms, and any work that ministers to the welfare of mankind—the part of mankind that is right around us—is well worth the doing.—Selected.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

District of Columbia to Be Square With Uncle Sam

WASHINGTON.—With the payment by the District of Columbia to the federal government next spring of a balance of $76,283.29 on account of advances for special park improvements, the municipality will have completely discharged all indebtedness to the United States under the several acts of congress directing reimbursement for advances. This is shown by the annual report of the auditor, Alonzo Tweedale, submitted to the District commissioners.

During the year just closed the District reduced its indebtedness by reason of cash payments made thereon in the amount of $1,986,250.23. Its total debt at the close of the year amounted to $7,015,433.29, made up of the item referred to on account of advances for park improvements and $6,939,150 of the bonded debt, which does not expire until 1914.

The report shows that the payment of $621,521.71 to the United States on account of advances, general fund, for extraordinary improvements, closes the account made during the fiscal years 1901 to 1909, inclusive, for certain extraordinary projects of permanent improvement in the District. Total advances on this account amounted to $4,144,696.35 and the interest charges thereon paid by the District to $587,887.64.

"During the period in which the foregoing advances were made," it is stated, "there was expended on account of permanent improvements over eighteen million dollars, one-half of which, paid from District revenues, amounted to between nine and ten million dollars. All of these extraordinary improvements have been paid in cash from current revenues, without resorting to long-term loans, or permanent improvement bonds, which is the usual practice in other municipalities."

The District government, according to the report, closed the year with a balance in the treasury of $75,875.24, and in the hands of the collector of taxes of $45,694.65.

Crank Inventions for War Offered the Government

WITH the outbreak of war in Europe even more than the usual large number of crank inventions and ideas relating to war on land and sea and in the air poured in to the army and navy departments, and there is no letup in the flood. Most numerous of the recent inventions which have been sent to the departments in Washington are those relating to bomb-dropping devices. The bombs assume many ingenious forms. Some are loaded with a vapor which produces sleep, so that an enemy may be lulled to slumber and easily captured without loss of life and the suffering which comes from the explosion of bombs of more destructive character. One man suggested that the bomb be filled with printed leaflets that should make an appeal to an enemy, and so instill a spirit of forgiveness and generosity, and thus produce the sentiment of peace.

There are also incendiary projectiles and bullets that, as the name and title implies, produce conflagration and are capable of creating havoc by fire.

In the class of devices that are defensive rather than offensive there is the arrangement of huge mirrors set up at such angles that the approaching enemy does not see the opposing force behind these mirrors, but gets the impression of terrain, which is merely the reflection of that over which they are traversing. Then there are the electrical devices which betray the approach of an enemy, such as threads stretched across the country which on fracture communicate with signals or sound alarms indicating the location of troops. There are hidden platforms which can be so nicely adjusted that there will be an indication at headquarters of the strength of the enemy and its character, whether infantry, cavalry or artillery.

One invention has to do with what is described in the files as "composite armor," which may be of alternate thicknesses, or, as in one case, be mounted on powerful springs, affording no adequate backing for the attacking shell to penetrate. The projectile, it is represented, under such nonresisting target, will bounce back.

Poor Thomas Jefferson May Have to Move Again

WASHINGTON'S most artistic bronze statue—that of Thomas Jefferson by the French sculptor, P. T. David Angers—has had many locations since it was presented to the United States in 1834 by Capt. Uriah P. Levy, U. S. N., and may before long be told again to "move on," finding a final resting place in Monticello. For several years after the statue was delivered it remained in obscurity for some reason not explained, but it was finally placed in the semicircle in front of the White House, about where the fountain now stands. In 1874 it was removed to Statuary hall in the capitol, and occupied a position between the plaster statue of Washington, after Houdin, and the statue of Edward Dickinson Baker of Oregon, where it remained for several years. It was then transferred to the rotunda of the capitol and placed between the pictures representing the surrender of Cornwallis and General Washington surrendering his commission, by Trumbull. After occupying this position for some time it was again removed and placed on the right hand side of the east entrance to the rotunda, opposite the statue of Washington, where it now stands, but just how long it may continue in this position is not certain.

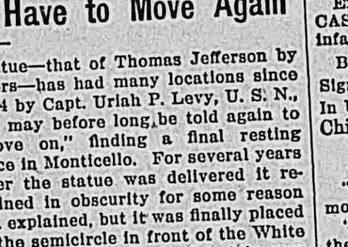

Just why Thomas Jefferson, third president of the United States (1801-1809), should change his location so often is rather peculiar; surely Thomas Jefferson of Virginia (1743-1826) and author of the Declaration of Independence and signer of the same, member of congress and minister to France, is entitled to have his statue located in some permanent and conspicuous place.

The bronze of which the statue is composed, having been cast in Paris, is of a most excellent quality, having withstood the ravages of the elements for many years while exposed in front of the White House.

This statue of Jefferson was the first statue of artistic merit—in fact, the first statue of any kind—to be placed in Statuary hall, formerly the old house of representatives, in the capitol.

Secretary Bryan Beats Swords Into Plowshares

ANOTHER delicate hint to the European belligerents to cease their fighting is contained in a present which Secretary of State Bryan has made to each of the 29 ambassadors and ministers who have signed with him one of the Bryan peace treaties. Included in the number are the representatives here of Great Britain, France, Russia and Belgium, all of which countries are at war.

Recalling the Biblical text, "They shall beat their swords into plowshares," the secretary obtained from the war department a number of obsolete swords, the blades of which he had made into miniature plowshares. On them he had engraved the text quoted.

It is the secretary's hope that these plowshares be always on the desks of the diplomats as paperweights, as perpetual reminders of "the better way." The handles of the swords Mr. Bryan has had made into paperweights for the members of the senate committee on foreign relations, who passed on the peace treaties, while the scabbards were cut into short pieces, filled with lead and polished up so that they also may serve as paperweights of peace.

The secretary also had replicas of the plowshares made of brass, nickel-plated, which he presented to the newspaper men who call upon him daily at the state department.

Put That Pain to Use

The network of nerves in your body, like the network of wires in a burglar alarm system, gives quick warning when anything is going wrong inside. Looking at it in this way a pain is a useful alarm. Now, kidney weakness is a dangerous thing—a condition not to be neglected—and it is wise to know and pay attention to the early alarm signals of sick kidneys.

Backache is a common warning of congestion or inflammation in the kidneys. It may be dull, nagging pain, or a sharp twinge when stooping or lifting. There are likely to be disorders of urination, dizziness, headaches, and drowsy, despondent, tired feelings.

It is very hard to strengthen weak kidneys at first, but neglect invites rheumatic or neuralgic attacks, gravel, dropsy, and fatal Bright's disease.

As a special medicine for weak kidneys Doan's Kidney Pills have been used for years all over the civilized world, and surely are considered reliable. The patient can always help the medicine immensely, however, by dieting lightly, using little or no liquor, tea or coffee, keeping regular hours and drinking lots of pure water.

"I can hardly straighten up."

As to Doan's Kidney Pills, read the following enthusiastic endorsement by one who has tested them.

LOST FIFTY POUNDS

Doctor Advised an Operation

John Schultz, stationary engineer, 1540 W. 18th St., Chicago, Ill., says: "Kidney disease in my case started with a dull pain in my right side which never left me. As time went by my kidneys got worse and frequently the kidney secretions were as red as blood. I noticed deposits in the secretions and the trouble got so bad that I had to lay off from work. My back was so stiff and lame I couldn't bend and sound sleep was out of the question. Mornings I was unable to dress myself without help. I had a poor appetite and lost weight so fast that my clothing hung on me like a bag. I lost over fifty pounds in weight. There was a large swelling over my right kidney and my complexion was sallow. The doctor's medicine didn't help me and he said I would have to undergo an operation. About that time I learned of Doan's Kidney Pills and the first two boxes helped me. I kept on improving and soon felt one hundred per cent better. All the ailments were removed and today I am in the best of health. My cure has lasted and I am only too glad to tell about my experience for the benefit of other kidney sufferers."

Mr. Peaslee's Retort.

The pretty little waitress in the hotel in Dilmouth was very prompt and efficient—as it to atone for the cuisine of the hotel, which was frankly bad. She was perhaps inclined to be a little pert at times, but that may have been merely her means of defense against the complaints of the patrons about the quality of the food and drink.

So when Mr. Peaslee asked his fourth cup of coffee, she brought it speedily. As he thoughtfully stirred the week, yellowish solution, the waitress remarked:

"You seem to be fond of coffee."

Mr. Peaslee, nothing abashed, smiled upon her benignly.

"I be fond of coffee," he admitted, placidly. "My! Ain't you quick to notice things! I'm dretful fond of it. If I wa'n't, he concluded, slowly, while his pleasant old face lighted whimsically, "I don't believe I'd drink so much water for the sake of getting a little coffee."—Youth's Companion.

Dress of Moslem Women.

We regret to learn that certain of our women, not appreciating the exceptional gravity of the general situation and of our present national situation, and in spite of the reiterated and energetic orders of the military authorities, dress themselves in an unsuitable way, and one calculated to seriously offend the religious sentiments and national customs. In the name of the well-being of the country we call upon the military authorities to put an end to such a state of affairs by a few exemplary punishments, for this method of dress is neither fashionable nor artistically beautiful nor does it comport with feminine prestige. —From the Tasfiri Efkiar, Constantinople.

Weak Heart

Many people suffer from weak hearts. They may experience shortness of breath on exertion, pain over the heart, or dizzy feelings, oppressed breathing after meals or their eyes become blurred, the heart is not sufficiently strong to pump blood to the extremities, and they have cold hands and feet, or poor appetite because of weakened blood supply to the stomach. A heart tonic and alterative should be taken which has no bad after-effect. Such is which contains no dangerous narcotics or alcohol.

It helps the human system in the constant manufacture of rich, red blood. It helps the stomach to assimilate or take up the proper elements from the food, thereby helping digestion and curing dyspepsia, heart-burn and many uncomfortable symptoms, stops excessive tissue waste in convalescence from fevers; for the run-down, anæmic, thin-blooded people, the "Discovery" is refreshing and vitalizing.

In liquid or tablet form at most drug stores or send 50 one-cent stamps for trial box to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y.

SPECIAL TO WOMEN

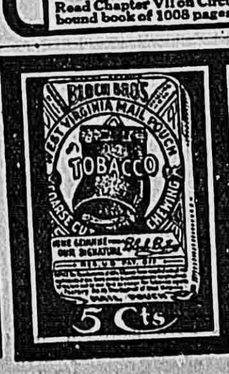

The most economical, cleansing and germicidal of all antiseptics is

Paxtine

A soluble Antiseptic Powder to be dissolved in water as needed.

As a medicinal antiseptic for douches in treating catarrh, inflammation or ulceration of nose, throat, and that caused by feminine ills it has no equal. For ten years the Lydia E. Why Currants Are Good for Us.

Currants, in spite of their rather insignificant place on our bills of fare, are decidedly beneficial to humanity. For their chief constituents, potash, tartaric acid—which gives them their sharpness—and grape sugar, all easily digested substances, all have value. English dietists, especially, harp on the health-preserving qualities of this small fruit.

THE WAR CF ROSES

By CATHERINE M. PATTERSON.

Theodora stood idly in front of the open window of her room at the inn. She looked directly at the mountains that loomed up in the light of a splendid moon that would be at its height about 11 o'clock. Just the right time, she thought. The right time, for what? for whom? The double thought brought an impatient toss of the head.

"I do wish I had common sense," muttered Theodora. "Just the smallest atom of it, at least enough to get me through tonight. Here I am, a grown woman with a brand new A. B. dangling at my scalp belt and to save my soul I don't know whether I care more for Jimmy Welting or Don Cunningham. They have both proposed, and auntie knows it, moreover, she says it is perfectly disgraceful the way I've kept both those 'adorable boys,' auntie's own words, mind you"—Theodora was addressing herself to the mountains.

"I know Jimmy sent these red roses; they make me think of him. But at the same time, these Killarneys are beauties, too, and I do love pink roses." Into the center of the exquisite flowers went Theodora's face.

"Botheration," she exclaimed angrily, "why must my night be pestered with these two who have been with me the whole blessed day? Now, I have their pesky flowers to choose between." No cards had come with the two corsages, but intuitively Theodora had attributed each to the proper sender.

"If I wear the red roses Jimmy will be camping on my trail the entire blessed evening, and if I wear the Killarneys Don will come to me the very first thing with that almost possessive smile he wears when I've been unusually nice to him before Jimmy's very eyes. I know what I'll do. I'll wear part of each corsage. That will keep the boys guessing."

She pinned the roses to her girdle "Mercy!" she exclaimed, "what a combination! But I'll wear it any way. I do hope auntie and the rest of the chaperon brigade won't think I'm quite out of my mind."

And catching up a bespangled scarf that Jimmy had once compared to a diamond-studded cloud, Theodora, to use her own expression, collected auntie, and the two made their way to the veranda outside the large living room, where the orchestra was playing the first waltz. A masculine form, evidently on the lookout, approached at once.

"May I have the first dance, Teddy?" asked Donald Cunningham.

"Surely,' 'said Teddy, looking up at him with her sweetest smile. "Why not?" she asked herself. "I'm wearing his roses as well as Jim's."

"I do hope it will be Donald Cunningham. His mother was a Van Courtney," auntie said to herself as she watched her niece. Of medium height, slender and the possessor of heavy black hair above gray eyes veiled with long black lashes, and a complexion that was the despair of the girls her own age and the envy of those who had passed farther on life's pathway, Theodora was worthy of any one's attention. Suddenly auntie spied Teddy's corsage, in sharp contrast to the white chiffon frock.

"Good gracious," she exclaimed aghast, "what ever possessed the child?" Quite overcome, she sank into the nearest rocking chair.

In the meantime the wearer of the red and pink roses was blissfully unconscious of her relative's consternation. Teddy was having the time of her life—with only one thing to mar the pleasure of being the belle of the hop. Jimmy had taken only one dance to Don's eight. Not that Teddy was lacking in partners, but she wondered not a little at the unusualness of it all and down in her heart of hearts were the coals of rebellion.

"Wish I hadn't worn his roses," she was thinking, and at this juncture the ever self-possessed Jimmy put in an appearance.

"My dance, I think, Teddy. But suppose we sit or rather walk it out. The stars are glorious. So is the moon."

Out under that same moon, down a path that was sufficiently outlined with trees to afford some privacy, a man took a girl's hand between his own, and in a voice that trembled just a little, said:

"Teddy, dear, you are wearing my flowers tonight and doesn't that mean that you care a little and that there is some hope for me?"

Was it the moon? Or was it Jimmy? Teddy's resolve went glimmering and Jim had won.

One night, on their honeymoon, Teddy asked, apropos of various things:

"Jimmy, suppose I had worn the pink roses that night?"

"Wouldn't have mattered in the least, dear," replied Jimmy between cigar puffs. "I sent those, too."

Warfare and Rain.

It is one of the extraordinary things of warfare that a big battle invariably produces torrents of rain. History contains innumerable instances, both on land and sea, and on more than one occasion the storm or showers that followed an engagement had no small influence upon the life of nations.

American Fishes.

The fishes of America north of the Isthmus of Panama embrace three classes, 30 orders, 223 families, 1,113 genera, 335 sub-genera, 3,263 species and 133 sub-species.

Time's Regret.

Time brings only one regret—that we had not more joy in the things that were, more belief, more patience, more love, more knowledge of the way things worked out, more willingness to help toward the final result.—Jennie June.

Dynamite.

Dynamite, inestimably more powerful than gunpowder, is formed by soaking a solid absorbent substance with nitroglycerin. The best absorbent material is found at Hanover, Germany and is known as "kieselguhr." When dried it is a white powder and is said to safely retain more than three times its own weight of nitroglycerin.

Still Believe In Charms.

A London physician practicing in the poorer districts of that city says that 25 per cent of the children coming under his observation wear charms and amulets under their clothing.

The Modern Woman.

"She is an extraordinary woman, you know. She paints, plays, rides horseback, boxes, plays foot ball, golf and is an aviator. It is too bad. If I knew how to darn my own socks I should marry her."
